DIFFERENCE BETWEEN PURE MATHEMATICS & APPLIED MATHEMATICS

But what's the difference ? The easiest way to think of it is that pure maths is maths done for its own sake, while applied maths is maths with a practical use...Other examples of applied maths might to be statistics or probability theory. Pure maths, on the other hand, is sepearate from the physical world

Pure Maths

Based on human invention seeks absolute truths often does not rely on data collection. Laws need not be observed or delivered directly from nature Theorems are built on previously proved theorems and axioms work does not need to have any immediately useful applications to be accepted as worth while
"Deductive reasoning"

Truths must be accepted by members of the mathematics/scientific community and meet certain "standards". human element. Both seek a beauty in their subject area. Both are everchanging and face paradigm shifts

Science and Applied Maths

Data collection is usually an important step in the method and hence the analysis, which leads to new discoveries. Hence, laws and observations and generally obtained directly from nature, which is the very essence of science. While some scientists do science just for the sake of it, most work is driven by practical application "Inductive reasoning".
